Roundtable Overview:

The Ross Institute of Accounting Research at NYU's Stern School of Business is hosting a Roundtable dedicated in memory of Seymour Jones on Recent Trends in Non-GAAP Reporting. The topic is controversial and of great importance to all members of the financial reporting community: preparers and users of financial statements, investors, accountants, regulators, and standard setters.

Non-GAAP reporting has been increasing in recent years, and a great majority of S&P 500 firms now report non-GAAP earnings and other figures. Do these voluntary disclosures enhance the market's information or merely camouflage firms' true performance? Do they make the market more or less efficient? The issue has stimulated many recent articles in the business press, SEC activities, and the FASB's Financial Performance Reporting Project.

For many years, the Roundtables have successfully generated public dialogue, engaging in topics that benefit many sectors of society, bringing together experts from the finance sector, industry, regulatory agencies, government, legal and accounting professions, and academia. The Roundtable consists of brief presentations by members of a panel of experts, followed by audience participation in a Q&A and freestyle discussion. Experts will debate the key issues related to the controversy of the increase in non-GAAP reporting. A networking reception with hors d'oeuvres, wine and beer will follow.
